The timeline is based on Hebrew Calendar starting at "0" (i.e. zero year, 1 is equivalent to 3,761 BC based on Hebrew Rabbinical tradition), however when you hover the mouse cursor over the point of interest, the years in Gregorian Calendar is shown in the pop-up tool tip. The explanations of the commands are listed under the little green square next to the title by a question mark (i.e.). Just hover the mouse cursor over it and a drop down menu will be shown. If you have a touch screen, you can use your finger to control them as well as the compression and expansion of the screen (i.e. which is equivalent to the + and – signs on top of the screen).

At the top of the control screen, you will see a white rectangular box with a "1" in the box (i.e.), this is the default search value of the app. If you know or remember the ID number of the character or event, type the number in the box and press the magnifying glass or the Search button (i.e.) to jump to that point in time. For example, 1.01 will take you to Noah, and 1.02 will take you to Abraham. The check box next to the hour glass is to toggle between Activate/Inactive the Search button. To the left of this check box is a wide white drop-down box with a down arrow on the right-hand side of the box (i.e.). Clicking this box with the mouse cursor will cause a drop-down to appear. The drop-down list includes most of the notable characters which will allow you to make your selection and then jump to that characters when the Search button is pressed. However, the spacing in between the characters and events is farther apart when using your finger on a touch screen.

The app is written to be read on a monitor, but not on a cell phone screen or other small mobile devices as yet. However you could still use a tablet or cell phone to connect to the app, but the larger part of the screen will be taken up by the header.

The timeline is best viewed using the following browser: Chrome Browser, Opera Browser, Internet Explorer, MS Edge and iOS Safari; other browser such as Firefox may not work properly.
